RCC dedicates library sign

April 6—a beautiful day for an outdoor ceremony—saw the dedication of a new sign directing travelers on Warsaw's Richmond Road to the Rappahannock Community College/Richmond County Public Library. The ribbon-cutting was attended by Dayle Collins and Mercer O'Hara, chair and vice-chair of the library's Board of Trustees; RCC president Dr. Elizabeth Crowther; Virginia Jones, RCC's dean of technology and learning resources; Patricia Mullins, academic dean of RCC's Warsaw Campus; library director Dan Ream; library staff members Ruth Lynn and Linda Taylor; and Friends of the Library officers Catherine Courtney, Marky Huffman, Beth Perry, and Joan Winter. Also present was the artist, Jim Thomas of Thomas Art & Sign in Tappahannock, who is one of only two remaining individuals in this area who still create hand-painted signs.

Dr. Crowther calls the sign “something we can all be proud of,” and “a nice visual for the library and the college.” She thanked the attendees, particularly Ream, for their commitment to the library's welfare, and added, “We have come a long way with its attractiveness and features for patrons.”
